A new £4.6m research centre that may be the first in the world to explore the potential of computer games as an educational tool to reduce levels of violence has been established at the University of Huddersfield. It is working on a global scale, having forged close links with experts and campaigners in China, Jamaica, Pakistan and Uganda as well as the UK. None in Three (Ni3) has been awarded £4.3m from the UK Government's Global Challenges Research Fund. The University of Huddersfield's own research fund has contributed an ex...
